“ The most recent, and biggest, impact she made on me was talking to me about becoming teacher. I told her that I had decided to make my major math education. Playingly, she said "you know my feelings on becoming a teacher". We messaged a bit more about this and that, but at the end of the conversation she, in short, told me to follow my heart, do what God had called me to do, and gave me some kind words of encouragement. She may have not shown her love for her students the way that most teachers do, but she showed that she truly cared by preparing us for the future and motivating us to be the best we can be. I have written about her in many of my education courses, giving her tremendous amounts of credit for me being who I am today and going down the path that I am. I never told her, but she definitely had the biggest teacher impact on me in my middle and high school years. I can only hope and pray to be half the educator, parent, and/or coach that that she was. My heart goes out to all of the family and anyone who truly had the honor and privilege of knowing Mrs. Jeri Finch. God bless.
